AUDITORIUM

ELEVEN A. M.

The U. S. Naval Postgraduate School

The U. S. Naval Postgraduate School began its formal existence in 1909, as the School of Marine Engineering, a part of the U. S. Naval Academy, in Annapolis, Maryland. Its establishment, impelled by realization of the need for advanced education of naval officers, came after some years of preliminary operation and development.

In 1912 the School of Marine Engineering became the Postgraduate Department of the Naval Academy and the scope of its engineering curricula was broadened. In 1919 a separate building on the Academy grounds was provided, and two years later the name was changed to the Postgraduate School. In the years between the wars, the School gradually extended its fields of study and accepted for instruction a few officers from other services. World War II caused a tremendous expansion in activity with an increase in enrollment from about 125 to over 600 officer students, in marked contrast to the period of suspension during World War I.

After hostilities ceased in 1945, a program was initiated to relocate the School and improve its professional status. Between 1945 and 1948 legislation was passed granting the right to award baccalaureate and advanced degrees; creating the office of Academic Dean; establishing the School as a separate activity with its own Superintendent; authorizing the move to Monterey; and purchasing the Del Monte site. General Line Schools were established at Newport, Rhode Island, and at Del Monte. In 1948 the Department of Aerology was transferred to Monterey and the remaining components followed in late 1951.

As presently organized, the principal components of the Postgraduate School are the Engineering School and General Line School. New buildings, providing a lecture hall, laboratories and other permanent facilities for the Engineering School, are nearing completion. Additional buildings for the General Line School and for certain supporting facilities are planned, the ultimate arrangement making full use of existing buildings and landscaping.
